Moreno Valley is a rapidly growing city located in Riverside County, California. To the south of the city lies the March Joint Air Reserve base, which is shared between the cities of Moreno Valley and the city of Perris. The city has an extremely convenient location where the Interstate 215 and State Route 60 intersect.

There are several opportunities available for prospective businesses in Moreno Valley. A large amount of undeveloped land and affordable leasing rates are just a few of the reasons why several businesses are choosing Moreno Valley as their base. Currently, the city is the second largest in the county and is considered one of the fastest growing cities in the nation.

There is a variety of housing available at very competitive pricing, which is one of the reasons why the population is escalating. As time passes, the city's median household income is also increasing.

There is over 15.8 million square feet worth of industrial and office projects being developed within the city. The sizes of the projects vary from 9,000 square feet for a research and development unit to a 1.8 million square foot logistics facility. One of the major focuses of the city is to create jobs for the residents. Family-supporting jobs are becoming plentiful as the city works with the developers. One of the major industries that is being developed is the medical industry.

With the growing population also comes an increased need for lodging and hospitality development. As such, six hotel projects are undergoing construction with a combined total of over 561 guestrooms.

There are several homes available in a variety of price ranges. The city offers everything from executive single-family homes to affordable multi-family lodgings.
