San Francisco, also known as the “City by the Bay,” is considered the twelfth most populous city in the United States. It is the second-most densely populated city in the United States, and is considered to be the financial, cultural, and transportation centre of the larger San Francisco Bay Area region.

San Francisco was inhabited 3000 years B.C. Prior to the expedition led by Juan Bautista de Anza, the area was home to the Ohlone language group. Later, Francisco Palou would found the Mission San Francisco de Asis in the area, and the Yelamu tribal group of the Ohlone were among those who were brought to work and live at the mission. Soon after this, they converted into Catholicism. When the California Gold Rush exploded, many treasure seekers rushed to San Francisco over rival Benicia. Consequently, the population increased from 1,000 in 1848 to 25,000 in 1849. Many crews on vessels rushed towards the gold fields, which left behind a forest of masts in San Francisco harbor. The U.S. military built Fort Point at the Golden Gate and a fort on Alcatraz Island to secure the San Francisco Bay. The Gold Rush phenomenon led many San Francisco businessmen to capitalize on this opportunity. Many banks were opened, and the Port of San Francisco became the center of trade in the city. It also became a polyglot culture, and by the turn of the century, San Francisco became a major city that was known for its ostentatious mansions, flamboyant style, and an active arts and culture scene. The following years saw the growth of the city as a financial capital, although some events, such as the Great Depression and some natural disasters shook their economic stability for some time. In recent years, the city has been attracting many entrepreneurs, computer application developers, and marketing and sales professionals. Although not as strong as it once was, they have become the mainstays of the San Francisco finance district today.
